

Robed in Compassion and Love (Inspired by Psalm 93)

Psalm 93 was traditionally sung to welcome the Jewish Sabbath on Friday nights and we often sing it at our Friday evening Eucharist. Through the lens of compassion we enter into the beauty of all creation. The challenge of growing in compassion never ends.

You, God, are robed in the light of compassion, the light of faithful love.

You laid the foundations of our earth, established the world and all it holds.
Your faithfulness fills all creation, from the first you have been with us.

You spoke and creation was born, the dawn's first light came forth.
All that you have done is good; our lives you fill with joy.

As great as the voice of the ocean, that speaks to the depths of our heart.
You speak to us of your compassion, not handing us over to the storm.

You call us to live with compassion, to fill our hearts with your light, to faithfully nurture your gifts: to become your daughters and sons.

O God, you are robed in compassion, and holy is your name.
Creation sings out your praises, a song we hear today!
